Behind the facade: Govt’s bid to amend RTI Act is part of a pattern to kill all anti-corruption laws

Simply put, the Right to Information Act, 2005, empowers every citizen to demand and obtain information from the government and all matters of public interest from the government and its agencies. The fundamental function of the RTI Act is to make the powerful tools to hold government to account, and that’s precisely what every citizen’s right to do.

WHAT RTI AMENDMENT BILL, 2018, AIMS TO

○ Scrap the chief Information Commissioners, State Information Commissioners, and Information Commissioners of India with central and state information commissions.

○ Abolish the RTI Act, and as a result, the RTI Act delayed citizens from accessing information, as well as the information which is not available under the act. This would make it easier for the government to delay the process of obtaining information.

○ The bill also includes provisions to limit the role of the Central Information Commission, making it ineffective.

○ The bill proposes to reduce the number of information commissions and their role in monitoring and enforcing the RTI Act.

The government’s justification that statutory authorities like the CIC, a constitutional authority, is not equipped to deal with the right to information, as it is an election commission.
