1. ORGANISATIONAL INFORMATION

The Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative (CHRI) is an independent, non-partisan, international non-governmental organisation, mandated to ensure the practical realisation of human rights across the Commonwealth. Full information can be found at: www.humanrightsinitiative.org.

1.1. History

CHRI was founded in 1987 by Commonwealth profession associations - doctors, journalists, lawyers, legal educators and joined later by parliamentarians, broadcasters, publishers and trades unions, - as they felt that while member countries had both a common set of values and legal principles from which to work, and a forum within which to promote human rights, there was little focus on human rights issues.

1.2. Objectives

CHRI’s objectives are to promote awareness of and adherence to the Harare Commonwealth Declaration, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and other internationally recognised human rights instruments, as well as in-country laws and policies that support human rights in member states.

1.3. Offices

CHRI has a family of offices - Headquarters in New Delhi, India; an Africa Office in Accra, Ghana; and a Liaison Office in London -, which jointly implement our programme activities. In 1993, CHRI's headquarters moved to New Delhi and the Africa office in Accra was established in 2001.

1.4. Governance

CHRI has an international Advisory Commission made up of eminent people from across the Commonwealth. It sets the policy directions for all the offices. The London, Accra and New Delhi offices have their own governing bodies that oversee the day-to-day implementation of program directions. For cohesion and harmonization the Chairs of all the executive committees also sit on the International Advisory Commission. The Director is the CEO in charge of all the offices and programs.

1.5. Registrations

India: FCRA Registration No. 231650671; Registration No. S-24565 under Societies Registration Act; Registration No. D.I.T. (Exemption)/94-95/C-390/94/417 U/S 80-G.

3. PROGRAMMES

CHRI believes that access to justice and access to information are matrix building blocks for flourishing democracy, targeted development, good governance and most of all, to achieve the fullest realisation of human rights. Since most Commonwealth jurisdictions are sadly deficient in these crucial areas, reforming police and improving access to information regimes is fundamental to catalysing positive changes, and have been the focus of CHRI’s work for the last decade.

CHRI’s right to information and police accountability programmes are supported and extended by CHRI’s human rights advocacy programme, which works across both programme areas and engages with international, regional and national mechanisms, civil society across the Commonwealth and international media to raise the profile of human rights issues and violations in the Commonwealth, particularly around issues of compliance with human rights obligations. CHRI has a small media unit that works to provide visibility to its areas of focus and to the organisation, as well as develop and disseminate mass media products.

3.1. ACCESS TO JUSTICE

In many Commonwealth countries, ruling regimes frequently retain systems and institutional designs more suitable to sustaining colonial power than servicing democracy. A large majority of people in the Commonwealth are poor and need the State apparatus to protect their rights. Nevertheless, few people have specialist knowledge about pivotal structures and institutions. Even where there is awareness, public calls for accountability often stop at pointing out violations or pursuing individual remedies and fall short of proactively engaging with government in knowledge based dialogues that will lead to building public opinion in favour of meaningful long term reforms in core areas of criminal justice. It has been CHRI’s endeavour to build an informed constituency for reforms through capacity building, mentoring and catalytic activities that can lend assistance to nascent civil society groups often working in difficult circumstances and resource in-country change without impinging on local spaces.

3.1.1. Police Reforms

The objective of the program is to create momentum for police reforms based on international good practice and principles of accountability, transparency and people’s participation. In doing this, CHRI aims to bring a human rights perspective to reform agendas that largely tend to be State centric exercises.

For the last ten years, beginning in India and steadily expanding outward, CHRI’s work on police reform and accountability has:

- built a strong comparative knowledge of policing across the Commonwealth through its research and publications as well as on the ground experience
- engaged the police establishment, civil society and governments in dialogue on police reform
- built informed demand for reform of the police force into a police service
• built knowledge about policing problems, practice and performance reform in all quarters in this greenfield area where there is little expertise and great need in developing countries
• built / strengthened networks in several countries of people and organisations interested in police reforms.

Programme highlights this year:

In India

• The Government of India set up a Police Act Drafting Committee in 2005, which submitted its report in October 2006. CHRI was co-opted as the only civil society organisation invited to be involved and participated in the deliberations, drafting and editing of chapters and embedding notions of civil liberties into the Model Act.
• CHRI has prepared briefs for and intervened in public interest litigation before the Supreme Court, which directed states in 2006 to limit executive interference in the appointment and transfer of police personnel and set up police oversight mechanisms and complaints authorities. CHRI made submissions on how the police force could be made more accountable and democratic in functioning.
• CHRI has, through civil society consultations and workshops, brought police reforms onto the agenda of a number of civil society groups active at the state level, which are in turn pressurising their governments to comply with the Supreme Court guidelines on police reform and pass new police Acts in accordance with the principles of democratic policing.

In Ghana

• Advocacy around the drafting of a National Policing Policy for Ghana
• A series of regional community-police forums
• A national forum on policing in Ghana’s 50th anniversary year
• Legal literacy pamphlets aimed at assisting members of the community to understand and exercise their basic legal rights
• Report on police accountability in Ghana (a sibling publication to the East Africa reports and upcoming South Asia report)

In East Africa

• CHRI’s six reports on policing in East Africa, including three on police accountability in Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania, released in 2006 have been commended by members of civil society, police and government in the region as an extremely valuable contribution to ignite the police reform debate in the region.
• The reports - and the surrounding on-going advocacy, conferences and media work - has established CHRI as a credible resource and reliable partner for local groups on police accountability and reform in the region
• CHRI’s work has dramatically increased the amount of information about policing available in the public domain in the region and so has deeply influenced both the quality and the quantity of the discussions around police accountability and reform.

In South Asia

- CHRI has begun to catalyse reform initiatives in policing beginning with a round table on Police Reform: An Exchange of Experiences from South Asia, in March 2007. The roundtable was held in New Delhi and brought together fifty representatives from India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, the Maldives and Pakistan, as well as experts from Britain and Northern Ireland. Delegates were from across government, civil society, media, human rights institutions and police organisations. The roundtable was the first time that the key players in policing from across South Asia were given the opportunity to meet and discuss the challenges, commonalities and future of policing in a South Asian context.

In India and Ghana, the presence of the offices has required the A to J programme to also include several complementary initiatives. The Indian programme includes judicial colloquia, prison reform work and demonstration projects in two Indian states (on community policing in Chhattisgarh and on strengthening community legal resources and assistance in court cases of riot victims in Gujarat).

3.1.2. Prison Reform

The objective of the programme is to institutionalise, replicate and monitor the effectiveness of changes already made in prison reform by opening up prison functioning to greater public scrutiny and to make existing systems function as they should.

The programme is currently confined to several Indian states, though learnings can be replicated in various Commonwealth jurisdictions. Recently, CHRI’s prison reforms programme has targeted institutional change, through pushing for inter-segmental coordination in the criminal justice system in addition to its focus on the Prison Visiting System. CHRI has worked with the judiciary, the prosecution, lawyers and free legal aid institutions for improvement in the chaotic prisons conditions, largely resulting from over-crowding.

Programme highlights this year:

- Publication of the Telugu and English version of its study on Andhra Pradesh jails, which has become a key resource for government officials working on prison issues in the state. In Andhra Pradesh, we were impleaded in the case before the High Court on prison conditions and as a result the High Court asked the government of Andhra Pradesh to submit its report on the findings by CHRI. The government also agreed to include CHRI’s draft in the forthcoming prison manual.
- CHRI’s consultant has been appointed amicus curae to the State Human Rights Commission to look into death row prisoners. He made right to information applications to get information on the 130 deaths that took place in the current year in AP.

- CHRI approached the Higher Judiciary in Rajasthan following the CrPC Amendment Act 2005 that came into force in June 07, to take up a suo moto writ for review of cases of under trial prisoners suffering prolonged incarceration for petty offences. This resulted in the release of about 800 such inmates during the period under review.

3.1.3. Judicial Education

CHRI facilitates judicial exchanges focusing on access to justice for the most vulnerable. Participating judges get a rare opportunity to hear from activists and experts on pressing issues specific to their region and familiarise themselves with recent legal and procedural developments relevant to their judicial work.

Programme highlights this year:

CHRI held a workshop to sensitise judges to the use of human rights in the administration of justice for about 40 judges of Chittoor district at Tirupathi on February 24-25, 2007. The ground covered ranged from understanding the origins and international standards relating to human rights to the implementation of these in the course of trial. Custodial justice, police malpractice and judge craft was also covered.

The workshop was well received and the Chief Justice has requested CHRI to make it a series of workshops. CHRI will be conducting more such workshops in the next year.

3.1.4. Demonstration Project - Gujarat

The Gujarat project focuses on the justice system. It has been underway for four years. Initially, it concentrated on securing access to justice for victims and guiding victims of violence through the criminal justice process. As it has evolved, the project has developed to include documenting the process by which justice is delivered by the Courts. This work is being completed with a view to drawing up suggestions for reform and change. The ultimate aim of the project is its own obsolescence and CHRI’s withdrawal - it intends to create permanent community based legal resources that can assist the community to access the legal system and demand better systems of justice delivery.

Programme highlights this year:

- CHRI has carried out six rounds of training for a group of thirty paralegals, who now form part of its network. These paralegals now have the skills to teach in neighbouring communities. They also staff citizen’s advice centres, produce law and rights based newsletters and publications and create legal and human rights awareness in the broader community.

- In June 2006, CHRI organised a street play on the right to information. Six shows were staged over two days. Administrative officials, police, local lawyers and the community all watched the play together. Right to information pamphlets printed in Gujarati were distributed during the shows. The play has been recorded and the footage is being used as public education material.

- CHRI has documented five case studies where the right to information was used to change the processes of the local administration.
- The Project Coordinator was awarded the International Chevening Fellowship, which allowed her to complete further human rights study in the United Kingdom. After her study in the United Kingdom, the Coordinator was invited to present on the project at the Rockefeller Foundation’s Study Centre at Bellagio, Italy. CHRI’s legal consultant, Mr Hanif Sheikh was awarded the Ford Foundation Fellowship to pursue a Masters programme in Human Rights Law at any university of his choice.

3.1.5. Demonstration Project - Chhattisgarh

CHRI’s work on policing in Chhattisgarh has several linked components. These include police training, building public awareness of police functioning and civil liberties and capacity building of the state Human Rights Commission. The more innovative components of the project lie in demonstrating how police-public cooperation can be created and the value this cooperation has for both public security and the protection of civil liberties.

Programme highlights this year:

- The Chhattisgarh team has taken the lead on building momentum around police reforms in Chhattisgarh and Madhya Pradesh in the light of the Supreme Court directives. They have been able to sensitize and bring the civil society of Chhattisgarh in a common platform to advocate as well act as a pressure group for a new police act and implementation of the Supreme Court directives. For instance, two workshops with civil society and media were organized in February at Raipur and a memorandum from civil society and media was submitted to the chief minister, the home minister, the chief secretary and the director general of police of the state.
- The team has been invited by different NGOs working in this sector across India like MSSeva of Uttar Pradesh, Prakriti of Maharashtra to provide training to their workers & community leaders on legal literacy & community policing.
- CHRI has been invited by the Chhattisgarh police to organize trainings for their police officers at the Chhattisgarh police training schools. Similar invitations came from the West Bengal police, the Goa police and the Punjab police.
- CHRI Chhattisgarh office was invited to Pakistan to share our Community policing model, processes and outcomes at a South Asia conference organised by Rozan, an NGO based in Islamabad and National Police Bureau-Pakistan on 19-20 March. Unfortunately, staff could not go because of visa problems.
3.2. ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Promoting a guaranteed right of people to access government held information through policy level interventions, engaging strategic constituencies - like parliamentarians, lawyers, media, civil society - building capacity, and larger public education has been a key area of work of CHRI.

For more than eight years, CHRI's access to information programme has in general:

- assisted member states and international bodies to develop and implement strong right to information laws, while more broadly promoting information disclosure policies.
- critiqued right to information Bills and provided substantial drafting inputs into proposed legislation to ensure the law is in conformity with international best practice
- provided technical advice/assistance with implementation of RTI laws
- resourced right to information workshops throughout the Commonwealth
- built right to information into the agendas of civil society groups, specially large-networked groups working directly with communities on the ground
- built expertise and civil society leadership by hosting interns from partner organisations and the media who are in / assume key positions in the RTI movement in their respective countries
- developed select partner organisations into dedicated local hubs for right to information
- published - a) detailed research papers and guides examining right to information and information disclosure
- built over 100 right to information specific contacts throughout all regions of the Commonwealth. CHRI has access to institutions and intellectual resources in all jurisdictions.

Programme highlights this year:

United Kingdom
- CHRI made a strong submission to the UK Department of Constitutional Affairs urging them to desist from making amendments to the FOI Act that would have the effect of discouraging potential requestors seeking information in public interest. Thanks to vocal opposition from RTI advocates based in the UK and abroad these harmful amendments have not yet come through.

Africa
- CHRI’s analyses of government FOI Bill in Kenya and recommendations for bringing their draft legislation up to internationally agreed standards has been taken on board by the relevant departments and draftspersons, who are working on our suggestions to strengthen these Bills. CHRI’s recommendations have also been used by civil society advocates to inform consultations with government on how the Bill should be improved.
- In Swaziland CHRI’s analysis has resulted in an invitation to become actively involved in improving the drafting of the Swaziland Government’s draft Freedom of Information Bill with the Commonwealth Secretariat and Government.
• CHRI was invited to assist senior officers of various departments of the Ugandan government to chalk out implementation strategies. Undertook two separate training sessions for Government officials in Uganda - in order to assist in implementation of the Ugandan Access to Information Act 2005 (September 2006, February 2007). CHRI presented a detailed road map which was welcomed by the Department of Information. CHRI was also requested by the Army spokesperson’s office to help reconcile their constituting law with the requirements of the new transparency legislation.

• CHRI is a member of the Africa wide coalition for Freedom of Information

• CHRI Africa spearheaded the formation of a coalition on right to information in Ghana with membership from a range of civil society, media and government organisations

• CHRI was recently invited to become one of only two international organisations to join in the Tanzanian civil society coalition for the right to information.

• The team provided detailed comments on the draft model law prepared by the head office of the Media Institute of Southern Africa (MISA) and hosted exposure visits for professionals from MISA, which has asked CHRI to facilitate workshops with its chapters on the technical aspects of a right to information law and how to engage with government to improve draft laws and policies.

Pacific

• CHRI has engaged with key regional institutions, including the Pacific Forum Secretariat (ForSec) and promoted the right to information to (and with), donors, civil society organisations, the media and governments (e.g. Pacific Centre for Public Integrity (PCPI), UNDP’s Pacific Sub Regional Centre (UNDP-SPRO), Regional Rights Resource Team (RRRT), Pacific Islands News Agency, UNESCO’s regional office in Samoa, AusAid Law and Justice Advisor/ Legislation Advisor, Transparency International in Papua New Guinea and Vanuatu, PNG Ombudsman and the Media Council, Government of Solomon Islands).

South Asia

• In March 2007, CHRI was invited to co-facilitate a Right to Information seminar in Colombo for Sri Lankan and Pakistani Civil Society Organisations. CHRI gave a presentation on the best practice provisions of a RTI law and facilitated a SWOT analysis of the Pakistan Ordinance and Sri Lankan draft Bill. This has enabled us to broaden and solidify our diverse networks with Sri Lankan and Pakistani civil society.

• For the past two years CHRI has worked with its Bangladesh partner Manusher Jonno Foundation to campaign for a guaranteed right to information law. Manusher Jonno is an operational foundation that partners with over 200 community based organizations to promote good governance. Hosted exposure visits for professionals from Bangladesh in October 2006. In 2007, Manusho Jonno translated CHRI’s seminal Right to Information report “Open Sesame: Looking for the Right to Information in The Commonwealth” in Bangla and the publication is being disseminated widely amongst civil society networks. CHRI also plans to translate and disseminate its basic right to information pamphlet into Bangla.

• To build on the momentum for RTI advocacy in the region, CHRI has recently developed an internet list serve for South Asian Advocates known as ‘SARTIAN’ - the South Asia Right to Information Advocates Network’.
India

India is the only country in South Asia that has a fully enacted Right to Information law. CHRI played a lead role at every stage in the evolution of India’s Right to Information Act, 2005.

Officer Training

- The team developed an informal arrangement with the Punjab State Information Commission to assist with training of officials of various public authorities in Punjab. Four such workshops were conducted and recommendations for improving implementation developed and submitted to the Government, the Information Commission and the nodal department for implementing the Act.
- The State Information Commission’s recommendation to the Punjab government has helped CHRI become the organisation of choice for training government officers in various departments in Punjab.
- CHRI also resourced officer training workshops for the Uttarakhand Academy of Administration, the UP Housing and Development Board, Steel Authority of India and the PowerGrid Corporation of India.

NGO Capacity Building

- On the 12th of October 2006 - the first anniversary of the RTI Act - CHRI organised a national convention to develop strategies for resisting amendments to the RTI Act in Delhi. This convention was attended by close to 60 representatives of civil society organisations from 17 states. Participants agreed to work together to build public opinion in their own jurisdictions using a variety of methods to thwart any move to amend the RTI Act in future.
- As part of its strategy to introduce awareness about RTI in large CSO networks the team has developed collaborative relationships with the Church’s Auxiliary for Social Action (CASA) and the DfID supported Poorest Areas Civil Society (PACS) partners. A state level capacity building workshop held in Bhopal in April with CASA partners led to the formation of a state level task force to educate people about the law and closely monitor its implementation in Madhya Pradesh. This task force will work with the MP Suchana Adhikar Abhiyan which we have nurtured over the years. Activists of the Abhiyan are in great demand in the districts for providing training to officers and assisting people with their information requests and appeals
- Conducted specialised trainings for civil society linking RTI to various development issues eg. environment, HIV-AIDS, NREGS
- The young advocates that we trained in Nagaland in 2005 are holding workshops and public awareness events with virtually no major funding support from any organisation. Three members of this team were invited by the Kohima Administrative Training Institute to resource an officer training workshop. In West Bengal the CSOs which we trained in 2006 are holding district level events to spread awareness about the Act
3.3. HUMAN RIGHTS ADVOCACY

Programme highlights this year:

- The Commonwealth Human Rights Network (CHRN), a network of human rights activists that CHRI coordinates, now represents 377 organisations, including several from the African countries and small states of the Commonwealth. CHRN has provided its members on a nearly daily basis with capacity building tools and mechanisms to strengthen their advocacy and weekly news updates. CHRI received several letters of appreciation (African Centre for Democracy and Human Rights Studies, Civil Liberties Committee, TUFHA, who received CHRN materials form the Gambia based The Association of NGOs,) for the information it sends out to members of CHRN. The Association for the Prevention of Torture thanked CHRN for circulating information on their campaign.

- Made a submission to the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group following the December 2006 military Coup in Fiji. The decision of the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group was on similar lines as CHRI’s submission.

- Published an article on UN voting patterns of Commonwealth members in print and online media in parts of the Commonwealth. This is to be followed by a full report on the human rights performance of the Commonwealth members of the UN Human Rights Council. A press release was made on March 12, Commonwealth Day, pointing out the poor human rights performance of representatives of the Commonwealth in the UN General Assembly, reflecting voting patterns that were working against fundamental political values of the Commonwealth enshrined in the Harare Declaration to which all CW countries are committed.

- Prepared a report on Human Rights Defenders, which will be released soon and shared with the members of the CHRN. The report is a very useful tool, designed for grass root and medium size organisations to assist them with identifying human rights defenders and put in place mechanisms for their protection.

- Advocated directly with Commonwealth agencies and at Commonwealth meetings for greater priority on human rights issues and contributing to official Commonwealth efforts to advance human rights standards.

CHRI’s report to CHOOGM 2007

CHRI makes a report on an issue of current human rights concern to the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, held every two years. CHRI’s report to CHOOGM 2007 will study the trend where increasing fear of terrorism across the globe has led states to enact anti-terrorism legislation that have enhanced police discretion, increased police powers and diminished police accountability even as they have reduced traditional protections of due process.

Campaign against the proposed Foreign Contribution Regulation Bill

Government has introduced a Foreign Contribution Regulation Bill in Parliament in December 2006, which could have harsh implications for NGOs who receive foreign money and a knock on effect on those who do not, but are intellectually resourced by them. As a member of Voluntary Action Network of India (VANI), CHRI has been working vigorously to build awareness of the frailties of the Bill and to rally people around it. CHRI has analysed the bill, made written submissions to the parliament standing committee, made representations to the government, international agencies.
3.4. MEDIA ADVOCACY

CHRI has a small, dedicated media unit that supports all programme areas.

Programme highlights this year:

- Backgrounders were sent to the international media around the Right to Know day, Africa day, International Anti-Corruption day and to the Indian media for campaign against the proposed Foreign Contribution Regulation Bill, to publicise the Supreme Court directives on police reforms and to campaign against amendments to the RTI Act in Jammu and Kashmir.
- Around 50 CHRI articles were published in the last year, and several of them were carried in multiple places, some in over 30 places. CHRI has been quoted in more than 150 places in India and Commonwealth. It has issued media releases around important controversial issues in addition to interviews and panel discussions on television and radio.
- CHRI’s radio programme on the right to information in Hindi ‘Ab to hum jaanenge’ had repeat broadcasts on public demand in several Hindi speaking states in India in 2006-07. We have received more than 250 requests for our publications and assistance in dealing with information requests and appeals where requests were denied.
- CHRI has lent support to the campaign efforts of partners in the voluntary sector - for e.g. the media unit assisted Voluntary Action Network of India (VANI) to create a campaign against the new FCR Bill.
- As a way of keeping track of the impact of our work we have been collecting and disseminating success stories of people who used RTI effectively to redress a public grievance. These success stories and a few others sourced from RTI discussion groups have been used to develop a calendar for 2007 with RTI as the main theme.

3.5. Africa Office

Programme Highlights this year:

- African Freedom of Information Centre - Interim Steering Committee Meeting

CHRI held a two day workshop for the Interim Steering Committee of the Africa Freedom of Information Centre. In attendance were representatives from Ghana (CHRI), Nigeria (OSIWA and MRA), Kenya, Senegal and Uganda. The Steering Committee was elected as an outcome of the Regional Workshop on Freedom of Information in Africa held in Lagos Nigeria in 2006.

The purpose of the meeting was to develop the terms of reference for the African Freedom of Information Centre, the meeting also identified framework for operations of the centre and fundraising strategies. The meeting was concluded with the agreement that the centre be registered and hosted by Media Rights Agenda in Nigeria.
• RTI Coalition Workshop

On the 22nd and 23rd March 2007, the Right to Information Coalition met with the International Partners from Open Society Justice Initiative (OSJI) and Media Rights Agenda (MRA) in Accra in order to draft an advocacy strategic plan for the Coalition to ensure that the Right to Information Bill is passed into law in Ghana. At the end of the workshop a concise advocacy strategy and work plan was developed to help the coalition to push for the legislation of the RTI Bill in Ghana. The Principal State Attorney and Senior Clerk Constitutional and Legal Committee, Parliament presented and challenges and opportunities were discussed. A concise advocacy strategy and work plan was developed to help the coalition push for the legislation of the RTI Bill in Ghana. The Coalition also engaged in a discussion about key criteria to be adopted concerning who to join to the Coalition.

• Access to Justice

Organised public-police forums, in different regions, bring together communities, senior police officers and victims of police misconduct to engage in an open dialogue around policing in the community. This process has allowed the police to understand the community’s experience of policing and also has helped the community to understand the challenges faced by officers working in a difficult environment. The workshops have worked to bring the community and the police much closer together, improving policing for the community and making police work more effective.

Embarked on a campaign to seek justice in the case of the killings and disappearance of 50 West Africans that occurred in the Gambia in July 2005

Researched and advocated against instant justice, highlighting the rising incidence of instant justice as a threat to peace and security in the community.

Advocated against forced evictions, for instance CHRI undertook a fact-finding mission on the eviction of residents of the Digya National Game Reserve, a predominantly fishing area in the Afram Plains, held a press conference and drew attention to the eviction.

• CHRI’s work and views have been extensively covered in both the print and electronic media in Ghana

3.6. London Office

Programme highlights this year:

• Participated in a seminar at the Institute for Commonwealth Studies where scholars in a research project assessed the international advocacy activities of non-government organisations, including CHRI. Richard Bourne, former CHRI Trustee and former head of the Commonwealth Policy Studies Unit, presented preliminary findings on CHRI after having visited the New Delhi office in February 2006. Funding for the research was provided by the Economic and Social Research Council.
• In May CHRI staff attended a Civil Society Consultation at the Commonwealth Secretariat. The aims were two-fold: to inform civil society about processes leading up to CHOGM 2007 so that they can participate more fully; and to generate new ideas about how civil society can collaborate with the Secretariat and foundation to improve the latter’s programmes. CHRI suggested the formation of an ad hoc group to work with the Foundation to improve communication and consultation with civil society organisations leading up to the next CHOGM. The Commonwealth Foundation accepted this idea and CHRI agreed to join the ad hoc group.

• In June a short piece on CHRI was submitted for the annual report of the Institute of Commonwealth Studies and in March CHRI hosted an information table at the Open Evening for supporters, alumni and prospective post-graduate students at the Institute.

• Representatives of the Political Affairs Division of the Commonwealth Secretariat briefed the London office and Commonwealth Policy Studies Unit on Commonwealth activities in the Maldives. Courtesy calls were also made on the Human Rights Unit and Civil Society Liaison Manager at the Commonwealth Secretariat.

• In July a memorial service for Beko Ransome-Kuti, former CHRI Advisory Commission member, was held at the Royal Commonwealth Society, organised by Richard Bourne.

• In July the Director met with the Head of the Human rights Unit at the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Director of the Commonwealth Foundation, and with the Political Affairs Division. The Commonwealth Human Rights Forum, Uganda, and the Maldives were the main topics of discussion.

• In the build up to CHOGM staff at London participated in the advocacy around the expert group on policing and CSO consultations held at the Secretariat (November 2006). In February 2007 staff attended discussions at the Commonwealth Secretariat toward forming the Commonwealth National Human Rights Institution (NHRI) Forum.

• In November 2006 the Liaison Officer presented a speech on a panel launching the International Financial Institutions Transparency Charter launch. As follow-up in December the UK office took part in a Global Transparency Initiative networking meeting sponsored by the One World Trust. This group undertakes joint advocacy efforts to promote greater openness and accountability among multi-lateral financial institutions. In February 2007 Office Staff participated in additional meetings with Global Transparency Initiative members, Open Society and Justice Initiative, Bretton Woods Project, regarding collaboration on Access to Information in the United Kingdom.

• In March 2007 the Liaison Officer spoke on the compliance of Commonwealth countries with human rights obligations, particularly the thirteen Commonwealth states newly elected to the Human Rights Council at the Commonwealth Scholarship Commission’s annual alumni conference.
